

A NEW PARTY.

The restless spirits of the old political parties begin to stir about as the time approaches for a Presidential election.

For the past twelve years some of the same organizations have been noted, but in number at each campaign. This year they will make an attempt to amalgamate and form a third party. On Tuesday last delegates from the Farmers' Alliance, the People's party, the Prohibitionists, the Knights of Labor, the Federated Trades and a number of others whose names are less familiar met in St. Louis to confer upon the desirability of such a party being organized.

It would hardly seem possible that such diversity of objects as is represented in the titles of these organizations could be found inherent in one candidate for a leader. There is little in common among them save the desire to break up both the Republican and Democratic parties.

In their session the Prohibitionists were firm on the point which their party names indicates, and the first question discussed was whether they would be satisfied with a declaration in favor of nationalizing the liquor traffic. The question of Government loans to farmers came up and was urged by President Polk of the Farmers Alliance. Again, there is a party called the Industrial League, whose platform appears to consist of wanting to elect Leland Stanford President, and so the thing went all through, each faction having its specialty, but there being no common ground on which all could meet.

A party made up from such material, having no elements of similarity, will never hold together through the hard pressure of a campaign. There must be some great object ahead which is recognized by people in every State, town and hamlet before a third party can be successful.

The owner of a house near Berlin found a single egg in the nest of a pair of storks, built on the chimney, and substituted for it a goose's egg, which in due time was hatched, and produced a gosling instead of the expected storkling. The male bird was thrown into great excitement by this event and finally flew away. The female, however, remained on the nest and continued to care for the changeling as though it were her own offspring. On the morning of the fourth day the male reappeared accompanied by nearly 500 storks, which held a mass-meeting in an adjacent field. The assembly, we are informed, was addressed by several speakers, each orator posting himself on the same spot before beginning his harangue. These deliberations and discussions occupied nearly the entire forenoon, when suddenly the meeting broke up, and all the storks pounced upon the unfortunate female and her supposititious young one killed them both, and, after destroying the polluted nest, took wing and departed, and were never seen there again.

Snakes in Ireland.

An Examiner Correspondent lets his light shine as follows: In your paper of Thursday in answer to an inquiry, Can snakes live in Ireland? you state: "They could live there if they could get there, and nobody killed them." You will have to take that assertion back, for they cannot live there, not from any cause but a natural one—the climate is too mild, too moist, and if brought there they would die of pneumonia at once. All foreign animals would die the same way if not kept in warm rooms. When snakes are exhibited there they have to be kept in blankets and in a warm glass cage. England is a few degrees warmer and drier (the air) and small snakes are found there.

Snakes, toads and foreign animals cannot survive in the open air in Ireland, owing to the moisture in the air and constant dampness of the earth.

There is so much nonsense about snakes in Ireland I wish the true case to be known. Yours truly, THOS. H. DAWSON.
